

Risk Management Program Development

Aligning solutions with an organization's most important business processes

As a multi-faceted consulting firm, VERTEX advises clients on current regulatory standards and best management practices to enact safe working conditions at all types of sites. VERTEX has developed compliance management programs for many multi-national corporations, in many different areas including site safety procedures and audits to regulatory consultation and CIH services.

Environmental and compliance programs typically include:

- Site review (site visitation, document review, regulatory records review, permit review etc.)
- Database/catalogue of sites
- Audits
- Risk ranking of sites
- Action items, training procedure development, and/or remediation based on risk rankings and findings
- Follow-up site visitations and asset review
- Re-ranking

In most cases, following the launch of the above steps, VERTEX will train client personnel to maintain the program. Training may include the performance of periodic site visitations, data management and ranking criteria.

VERTEX provides the knowledge and tools to develop working conditions through advising in the design, construction management, and operations of buildings to meet or exceed ISO, OSHA, EPA, and additional standards and guidelines, including best-practice approaches to health and safety that align solutions with building occupant safety, health and comfort requirements. Our professional resources include industrial hygiene, engineering, building science and sustainable building expertise. We have experience working in team environments to deliver integrated interdisciplinary consulting products and technical solutions that improve environmental performance, human productivity and business results.

Additional Services:

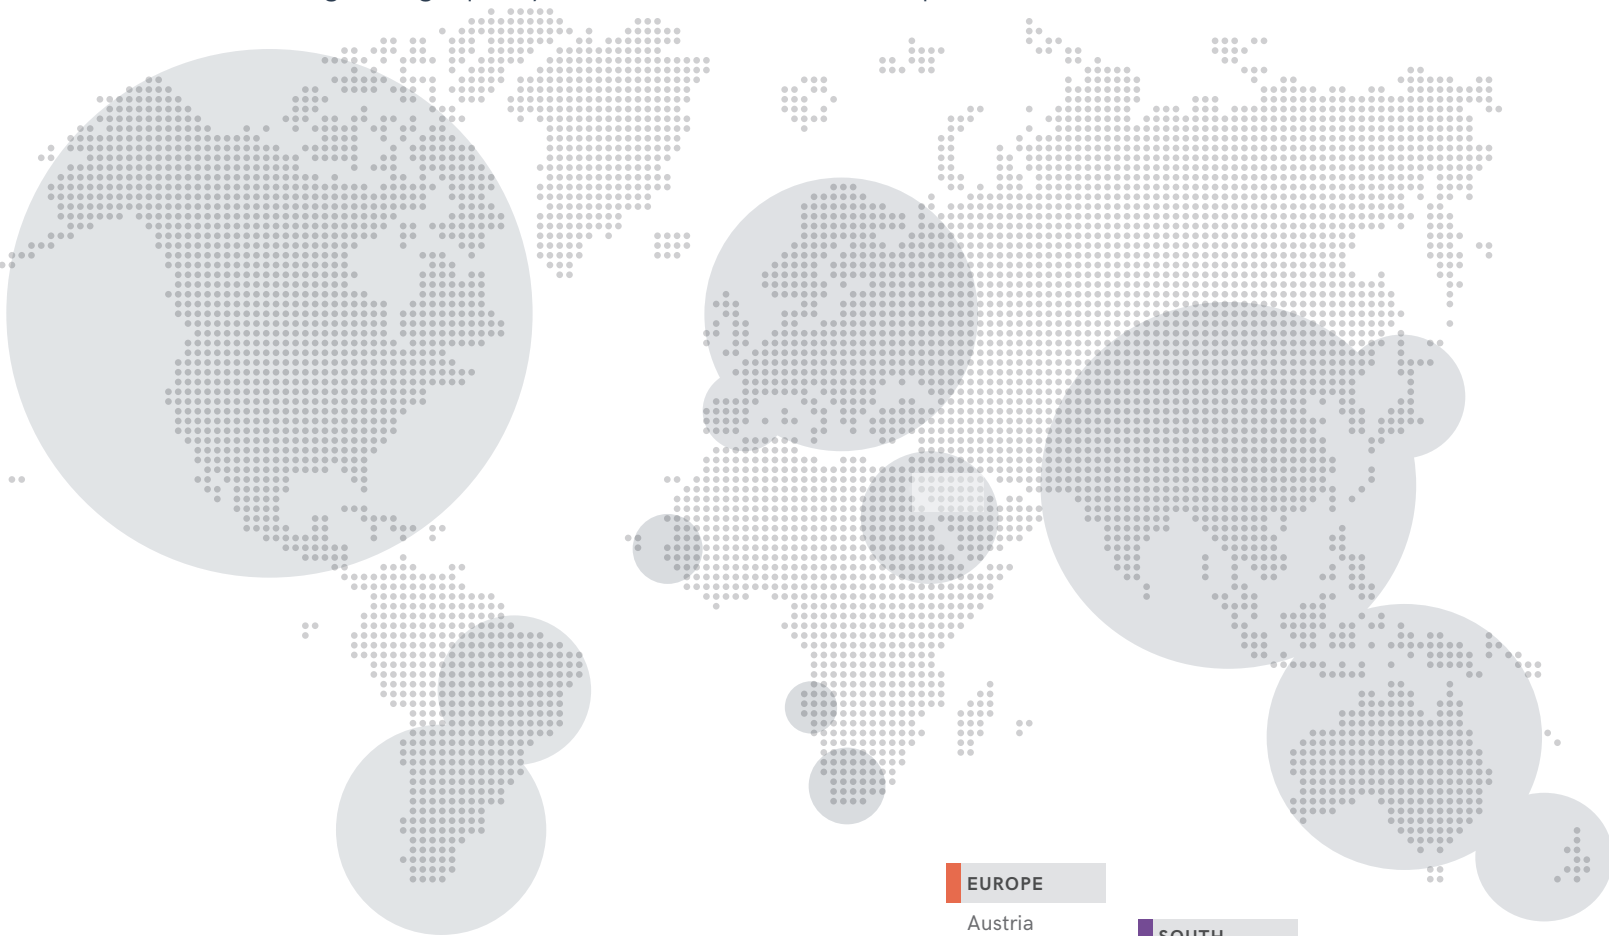

- Safety surveys/site audits
